This is the letter "u." The letter "u" says, "uh," like in up, under and umbrella.

The letter "u" looks like an upside down letter "n" —

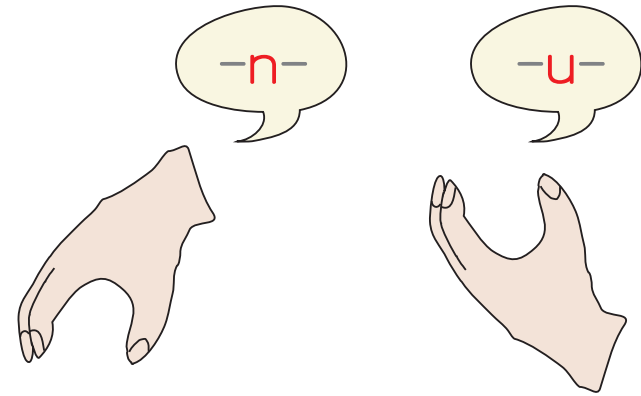

The letter "n" says "nnn" and the letter "u" says "uh."

(Have the child make the letter "u" and "n" sounds several times.)

Although the letter "u" is at the beginning of some words, most of the time you will find the letter "u" in the middle of a word:

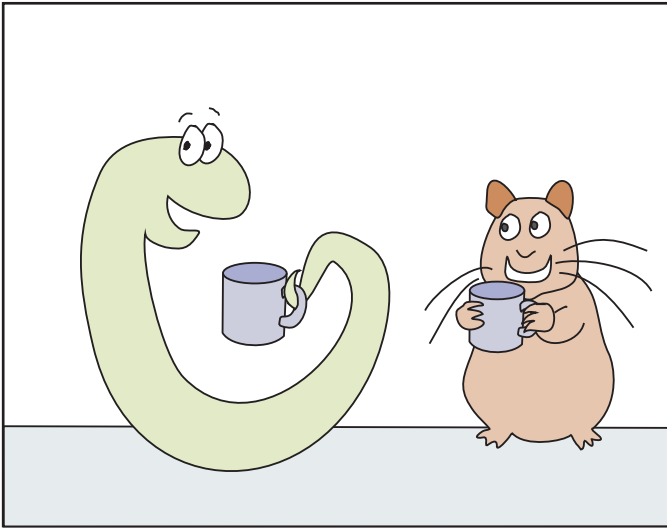

Let's use our hands to make the letter "u":

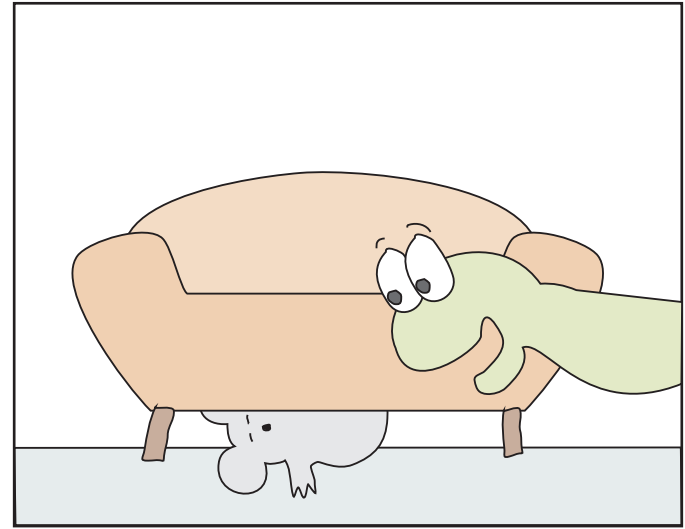

And what does the letter "u" say? ("uh").

There are two words in this book that use the letter "u" — can you read them?

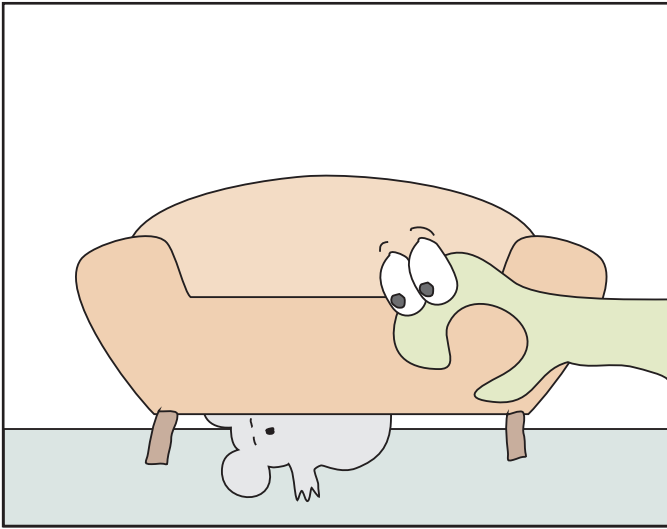

cup
up

One day, when sid and ham are having a nice cup of tea, sid realizes that he hasn't seen or talked with sis for a long time.

sid looks and looks and finds sis under the sofa. "Hey, little buddy," says sid. "What are you doing there?"

sis doesn't answer. In fact, sis doesn't move at all. "Uh, oh," says sid. "I think sis is sick."

sid grabs the phone and by accident calls the rabbit next door. "Hello?" says sid. "I need a doctor — quick."

“Let me see if the doctor is in.” The rabbit puts a sock on his head. “Yes, the doctor will be right over.”

Two minutes later, sid opens the door. “Oh, no, not you again. I thought I called a doctor.”

"I am a doctor." The rabbit puts down his bag and points at ham.

"That animal is sick."

"I am?" asks ham.

"How sick?"

"Very sick," says the rabbit.

"You need to drink a cup of my special medicine."

The rabbit pours some medicine in a cup
and gives it to ham.
“Drink it up, up,
up.”

ham grabs the cup
and takes a little sip.
“Ewww,” says ham, a bubble coming out of his mouth. “It tastes like soap.”

“Exactly!” says the rabbit.

“We are going to wash
the sickness out of your tummy! Now drink it up,
up, up.”

ham takes another
sip from the cup.

“Ewww. Now I really
feel sick.”

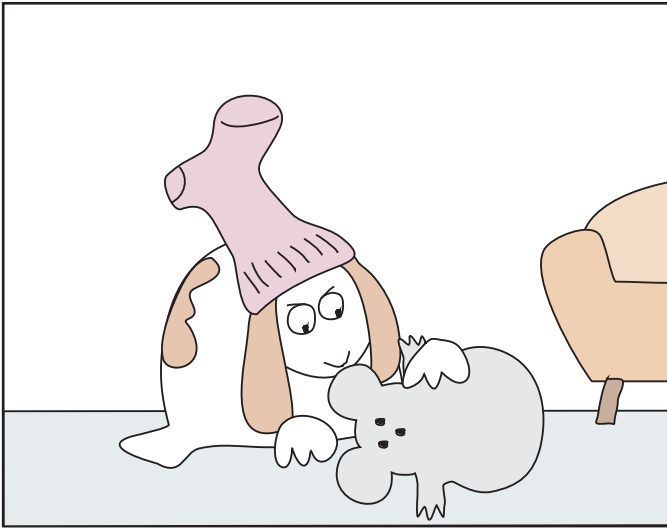

"Well, you aren't sick,"
says sid. "sis is sick."

"Oh, good!" says the rabbit. "Another sick person. Where?"

sid points. "The mouse
over there."

"That is not a mouse," says the rabbit. "That
is an elephant."

The rabbit pokes sis.

"A bit small for an
elephant, but very sick.

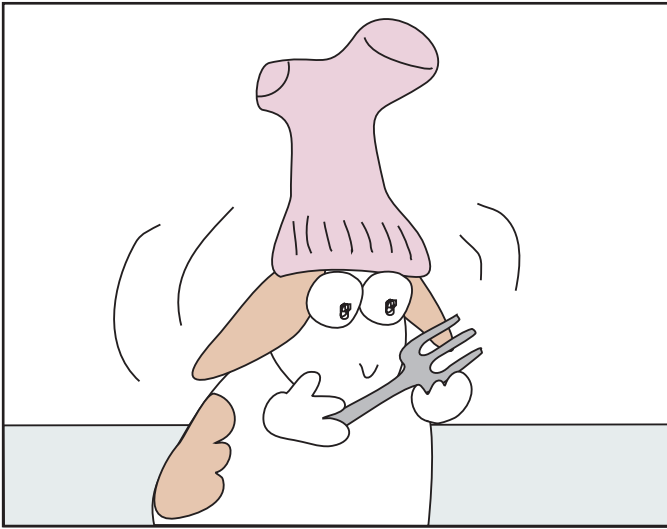

We will take her
temperature."

"Hey!" says the rabbit.

"This elephant doesn't have a mouth. I will have to put the thermometer in my own mouth."

“Oh, my gosh!” says the rabbit. “I have a fever. Quick! Where is the cup?”

The rabbit drinks all the soap in the cup.

The rabbit burps, and a hundred bubbles come out of his mouth. He floats up, up, up and out the window.

“Take two aspirin and call me in the morning,” says
the rabbit from way up
in the sky.

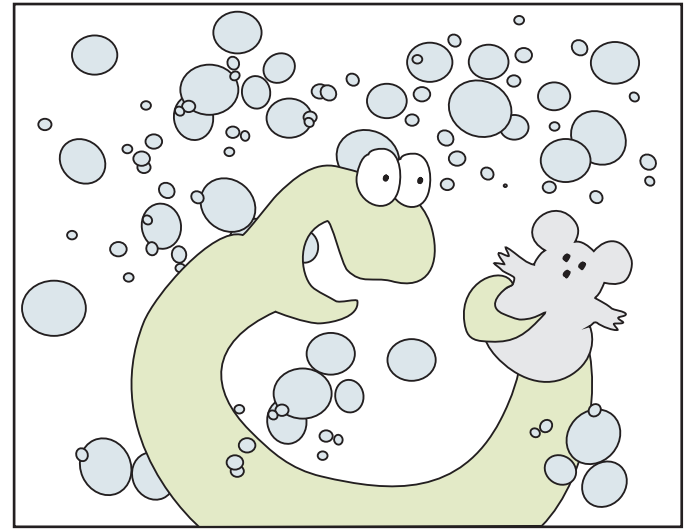

sid waves goodbye
just as sis wakes up
from a very, very long nap.

“Hey, hey,” says sis.

“I was asleep for
a long time, wasn't I?
Where did all these bubbles come from?”

sid laughs. “You don't want to know. Hello, sis.”

I see you are ready to start talking again.”
